EXPERT BIOGRAPHY

Tom Hockaday, Owner, Technology Transfer Innovation, UK

Tom Hockaday was the CEO of Isis Innovation Ltd, the University of Oxford's Technology Transfer company from 2006 to March 2016. He has since set up Technology Transfer Innovation and is working as an independent consultant. Tom is currently working with clients in Barcelona, Madrid, Mexico, Munich, London, and Oxford. These assignments include advising universities on Technology Transfer and Innovation strategies, investment funds; membership of the BeAble Investment Committee in Madrid; and advising companies on growth strategies.

Whilst at Oxford, Tom oversaw the expansion of Isis Innovation into one of the world's leading university technology commercialisation organisations with its activities greatly contributing to the substantial impact of the University of Oxford around the world. He led the international expansion of Isis including establishing offices in Hong Kong, Madrid and Kyoto, and a number of joint ventures in China.

Before Oxford, Tom spent seven years at Bristol University, leading technology transfer activities, and four years previously at University College London.
